Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Robotics Research Technical Report: Nonlinearity of Davenport-Schinzel, Sequences and of Generalized, Path Compression Schemes This problem has originally been posed by Davenport and Schinzel. Their interest in it arose from its connection to the analysis of solutions of linear differential equations. Recently, Atallah At has raised it again independently, because of its significance for problems in dynamic computational geometry. These two applications are quite similar, and can be briefly described as follows. Thus, in this setting, Davenport-Schinzel sequences are strongly related to the problem of computing the (lower) envelope of a set of functions which intersect each other in pairs in at most some fixed number of points. This problem has many applications in computational geometry and related areas, many of which are given in [At]; some additional applications will be noted in Section 7.
